I wholeheartly support the proposal to apply Federal law to advertising and online transactions. There are many misleading, even downright fictitious ads littering the Internet.

It's also a damn shame that there are more ads than content on the average Web Site. In order to access some areas of a Web Site, a person must give up personal information - also someone can continually add me to marketing lists, follow me everywhere I go on the Net.

What all this boils down to is, frankly, legalized harassment.

If only the FTC, FCC and all the other "alphabet soup" Fed. Govt. agencies cared at all about a person's right to privacy.

The FTC could take this opportunity to take a stand and make some friends among the voters. Sorry to be wordy!
