Subject: I support the right to have my Rx

As a long time wearer on prescription lenses (over 30 years) I depend upon the availability of my Rx to purchase lenses where most convenient and least expensive. Do not place restrictions upon consumers' rights to choose where to purchase lenses. The internet is very quick and reliable for this purpose and the freedom to make this decision should rest with the consumer, not the health care provider. My physician doesn't try to sell me vitamins or exercise equipment, why should my ophthalmologist sell me a product which he/she has an interest in prescribing?
